In sparring or in clinches Palmer's eyes were kept almost continually on his manager, the veteran, Tom O'Rourke, who crouched at the side of the lower corner, shouting instructions to him through a megaphone. He appeared to have no initiative whatever, and tried only to follow instructions. The latter was as audible to McCarty as to Palmer, and every move of the former was anticipated by the latter. McCarty frequently failed and writhed in pain as the result of the blows and "beastly" kicks of the victor.

Teams in Membership Campaign Win Just 300 More Than They Sought

When the Star-Bulletin went to press for the second edition yesterday afternoon, the last report from the headquarters of the Young Men's Christian Association membership campaign, which took the city by storm yesterday, was to the effect that four hundred and twenty-three new members had been secured up to three o'clock. From this time on until the time the campaign came to a close at five o'clock, seventy-eight additional new members were secured, bringing the grand total for the entire campaign up to five hundred and one, three hundred more than the association expected.

Although the Blue team took the lead at the opening of the campaign, and kept it until the early part of the afternoon, the Reds crept up on their opponents and finally beat them to it by securing 277 new members to their opponents' 224. The success of the campaign is not due to any one person in particular, as every member of the twenty-six teams in the field worked his hardest in the endeavor to secure members. The whole affair went off without a hitch, and is a fine example of what organization and cooperation will do.

Captains Work Hardest.
The captains of the Red and Blue teams, George Angus and Emil Berndt, were stationed at headquarters, each with a telephone at his elbow as a medium of communication from the different teams. Reports were received at the rate of two every five minutes, and the captains were kept busy from the time the campaign started until it came to a close. A. H. Tarleton, A. A. Ebersole, Ed. Towse and Secretary Larimer, organizer of the campaign, took down the names of the new members as they were received, and took charge of the funds. Secretary Urice had charge of the bulletin boards and kept the public informed as to the progress of the campaign. At half-past one o'clock, F. C. Atherton, treasurer of the association, was seen departing for the bank with two boxes of checks and a bag which contained something that jingled. Headquarters was well managed, none of the work of the assistants conflicting with the work of others in charge of the different phases of the work.

NATIVE SAM

Commander W. M. Crose, found a way to put to good use the lost art of wrestling a wasp passed through Honolulu on the about 11, and incidentally brought back a new ball game.

It has been said that America has lost a great deal of its native spirit, but it is not true.

The crew of the Princeton, a story over which the governor has been told, was interested in them and they were very close, cloth did not give them very much that was new as good as war.

Every day, said Farmer, and we have seen the most tireless of native teams. The other league, they play rattling on, and they can't pitch, when it comes to hitting there is no one to be seen.

ed the champion team of the day. This team composed the flying squadron of the Reds and secured fifty-two members. The flying squadron of Blues in charge of Messrs. Hunn and Dondoro, succeeded in getting twenty-two members.

It was a case of pure hold-up when Fred Zeigler and H. Gooding Field detained a train on the O. R. & L. for ten minutes during which time they secured twenty-six members for the Blue team.

Messrs. Jones and Gaynor, of the Hawaiian Trust Company scooped up thirty-seven men and boys for their side.

Personal honors were awarded to John Anderson and Charles R. Frazier.

Following is the lineup of the individual teams:

The Onlooker

Palace Never Had Gas--First Electric Light

There was no "local gas plant" to illuminate the palace in Ka'akaua's reign. Kerosene was the illuminant there until 1886, when the late D. J. Smith, representing the Houston-Thompson company, installed the first electric lighting plant in Honolulu, especially for the Iolani palace. It was in the legislative session of that year that a noble, who is still living, opposed the palace electric lighting appropriation, saying that the electric light was then "merely a toy" in the States. A local paper put him right with the information that for several years past steamships in Atlantic coast docks had been working cargo all night by the electric ray, and that some cities in the states had for some time been lighted by electricity. It was funnier what the premier said, though, defending the appropriation. "The electric light is a great improvement," he naively remarked. "All you have to do is to strike a match, and you have your light."

Motto For Improvement Campaign

While Attorney Ashford is about it, in preparing an ordinance for the suppression of the hideous noises from open auto-mufflers, he might as well put in a section, or make a new ordinance, to stop the almost as bad a nuisance of smoking automobiles. Long ago Paris set the example of sending smoking autos off the streets, but Honolulu still yields complacently to the outrageous abuse "No smoking aloud" might do as a motto for a campaign against the twin nuisances.

Pioneer Promotion Man

While so much is being said about promotion, I rise to move for some recognition of the pioneer in promotion work in Honolulu. J. J. Williams, the veteran photographer, deserves the title and should be asked for a large portrait of himself to decorate the promotion rooms.

Meeting Jimmie on the street this week, I asked him to plead to the soft impeachment contained in my motion herewith submitted to the community. "Well," he replied, "for many years before the promotion committee was organized, I had the expenditure of all the money the chamber of commerce and the citizens contributed to promotion work."

"It was I who introduced the raw pineapple first to San Francisco, as well as Hawaiian honey, string beans, egg plant and avocado pear. Yes, and watermelons."

"When I took a lot of watermelons from here to San Francisco, John D. Spreckels loaded them on a band wagon and paraded them through the streets in triumph."

Jimmie did not yield to the temptation of adding that there was not a dry eye amongst the dusky denizens of the Mission.

"Yes, I started the Paradise of the Pacific, which for years was the only promotion literature issued, excepting an occasional special edition of a newspaper and more rarely a small before the promotion committee was organized, I had the expenditure of all the money the chamber of commerce and the citizens contributed to promotion work."

Did-timers well recall the time when something was felt to be wrong if a week passed without the papers having some new promotion freak of Jimmie Williams to exploit.

Let's have that "pikur," Jimmie! Hanging in glorious effigy is none too good for the man who started the tide of tourists this way, which is now beginning to come in like a flood.
